Customer Reviews

Everything in this book is a fake by this fake named author "Taqi Chhapra" because it's all off food.com such as "Coca Cola Goulash - Hungary Style" which is recipe #398468 on food.com web site. There are 846 Hungarian recipes on food.com in case that's what you really want. And, there are 104 "paprikash" recipes there as well in contrast to the single one in this book. All "paprikash" means is you add "paprika" a red pepper that is not always a hot pepper to the gravy type sauce you make. Hence, Paprikash. NBD. But you can get hot Hungarian peppers as well as sweet red Hungarian peppers. Red peppers just mean they are ripe and not necessarily hot. All green peppers will turn red when they are ripe. If they are a hot pepper, they will also be red, ripe and hot or spicy. And, as another reviewer pointed out, the picture is the same as that on the front of another ripoff recipe book by this same KDP publisher that specializes in these ripoff books.

The recipe for the teaser on the cover is not in this book that I could find. This cover image is also on a book of French (sic) recipes, so is it a French dish, or a Hungarian one? My guess is that is an American dish, as many of these recipes also look to be Americanized. Calling a recipe "Hungarian" does not make it Hungarian. My Slovak friend with Hungarian roots on both sides, does not agree that these are Hungarian, Czech or even Eastern European. She says they are more German, but isn't sure.. Certainly the Cheeseburger Pasta and Coca-cola Goulash...even "Hungary-style" are not Hungarian. :(They are good recipes, but the book is mis-named and is merely a cut and paste of recipes off the internet,

Taqi Chhapra opens the kitchen to the smells and tastes of fine wholesome cookery with this book devoted to Hungarian Main Dish recipes. Known to be in the forefront of hearty diets, these recipes are not only easy to prepare, but each recipe gives a list of ingredients to prepare ahead of time, well written directions on how to prepare the dishes, and each dish is accompanied with a color photograph of just how the finished product will look. The taste test is up to you! Some of the recipes included are Chicken Paprikash, Hungarian Goulash, Cheeseburger Pasta, Crispy Fish Sausages, Hungarian Style Meatloaf, Hungarian Stuffed Cabbage Rolls, Hungarian Chicken Livers, Hungarian Egg and Potato Casserole, Hungarian Meatball Stew, Transylvanian Cabbage Gulyas, Hungarian Noodle Casserole, Hungarian Rice With Meat, Red Cabbage with Apple Hungarian Potato Pancakes, Toasted Cabbage Hungarian-Style and many more. You can tell by the titles that these are going to please that special hunger for Hungarian foods, but they definitely are. For nutritious and healthy and tasty dishes you can't go wrong with the variety in Taqi Chhapra's book. Grady Harp, March 14
